

Dear President,

I am Ruthie, a fifth grader at Maxwell Elementary in Lexington, Kentucky, I am here to tell you what I care about that our country needs.

I believe that citizens in our country need to understand one word - equity. I think that we have had barely any of equality and now we need lots of equity. For starters, in your first four years or more, you should pay more attention to those who need help. People of all different colors of skin, where they come from, need to be paid attention to. They get treated badly every day from people in our country, mostly white rich and wealthy men and women, and we need to put a stop to this.

Some more issues I would like you to focus on are the people who do not have any place to live. During these hard times, you need to help them. They don't have that much money food, water, houses, and they are struggling harshly. It would make our country better to be kinder and respectful.

These next four years I am worried that you will either be kind to our country or make things worse. I am excited that if you make things better, it would be a brand new start. I know this is a letter written by a fifth grader to a president, and you may think of this as just another letter written to you, but really this is a meaningful handwritten letter that I put all my work into for the past three weeks.

Sincerely,
Ruthie
